Q: Does Ubuntu support internal SATA hard drives? I have to get a new HDD for my laptop. I found a new model that is compatible with Ubuntu. The new model is an 8TB HDD. I would like to have my laptop be able to read and write to this type of hard drive, but I don't know if Ubuntu supports SATA 3.2. Please let me know. A: As Linux doesn't use UFI/GPT we are good and can continue to use UEFIs, which have been ported for Linux. Short answer is: yes you can use them, and since they aren't UFS we don't have to worry about the 12GB filesystem limit either. My thought was you could experiment with ZFS, or ReFS to put the 8TB drive in a RAID1 or 2. When using a ZFS or ReFS filesystem with GPT boot you may need to install grub2-efi, or use grub-efi-amd64-bin. I thought I read something about the new 12TB drives using a different connector or protocol. See A: Each version of Ubuntu comes with a live CD that supports read/write functionality. You can run a live CD on any desktop computer and have access to your internal hard drive. I would check if the Live CD supports reading/writing to your hard drive. If it supports it, it should be a breeze to install onto your desktop PC. .com Tel: +1 (844) 839-9381 Readers can contact the author of this story directly via e-mail at
