In The Profound Effects of Peer Mentoring, the basketball coach in an interview said the following: "The white men on the team would have to change their attitude and be more like the Hispanic and African American kids." (p.9) Reading around, I saw some people use the term "cocaine cow" to refer to black people. Considering how this term has been used for decades to refer to black men and women and used even at the highest-levels of sports, I was wondering if it is actually a racist slur. Is it? A: It's used quite often in the context you described. Usually in a derogatory way. Usually within a group of people one group are people of color and the other white people. Here are some examples: "The white men on the team would have to change their attitude and be more
