poetryTransfer of adenovirus from marine animal species. In summary, all marine animal species investigated to date carry adenovirus as a contaminant. In all the fish species investigated it is possible to isolate the virus at significantly higher titers than terrestrial animal isolates. These marine isolates can be subcultured in cell cultures at rates three to four times that of isolates from terrestrial animals.
The physical and biological differences which exist between marine isolates and terrestrial isolates may be due to the different environmental conditions and the different metabolism of the marine animal host. For example, the monolayer cell line plaque assay may overestimate the infection rate of marine isolates. The marine animals do not appear to be a naturally occurring source of adenovirus.Vasodilator role of umbellatone in perfused canine mesenteric vascular bed. The relaxation effects of umbellatone, an active compound of Zanthoxylum piperitum, on the isolated canine perfused mesenteric vascular bed were investigated. Umbellatone (10^{-10}), 10^{-9}), and 10^{-8})M produced dose-dependent relaxations (pD₂ values 6.82, 6.54, and 5.89, respectively), and pA₂ values 7.01, 7.11, and 7.38, respectively). However, phosphodiesterase inhibitors (MDL-17,432, iomeprol, and papaverine) had no effect on the umbellatone-induced relaxations. Umbellatone appeared to be a direct vasodilator in the perfused canine mesenteric vascular bed.We are looking for an experienced
