Presence of baculoviruses in Pityrogramma juniperina in Greece. The present study investigated the incidence of viruses in the lacewing, Pityrogramma juniperina, collected from Gomis (Thessaloniki, Greece) from 1995 to 1997. Antigenicity studies of viral particles using monospecific polyclonal antibodies and electron microscopy confirmed the presence of a granular enveloped virus having geometrical dimensions in the range of 0.2-0.5  $\mu$ m above the threshold of 0.75  $\mu$ m above the diameter of the standard baculovirus. Sequence analysis of the AcMNPV polyhedrin gene identified three sequences matching to PeGV-B type, and one sequence matching to GpGV-C type viruses. The corresponding sequence was compared to the sequence present in GenBank, where it was identical to GpGV-C type sequences isolated from GpGV-C. The combination of analyses clearly indicates that the virus present in P. juniperina is belonging to GpGV-C type of the family Baculoviridae. The identified virus could have played an ecological role in the dynamics of the lacewing, as indicated by a high level of interaction between the virus and the insect, by a baculovirus' midgut infection pathway and by a lack of symptoms in the insect. The paper is the first report of a baculovirus infecting P. juniperina in Greece. "No amount of words can do justice to my immense sadness and guilt for letting my family, my friends, my students, and the rest of the Yale community down," he wrote. The letter comes as Rosenberg was ordered by New Haven Superior Court Judge Edward McLachlan to remain in custody following a court appearance this morning. "As a result of the arrest and the letter, I will not be teaching this spring, as required by Yale
