I'm trying to build my first home network and I'm running into an issue. I had a router, and now I upgraded to a newer one and I want the old one to work with the new one. However, the main IP of the old router, 192.168.1.1 is not working with the new one. I'm running Ubuntu 13.04 with the router running Tomato firmware (the firmware is really old, and Ubuntu and the router run really well together). Any ideas on how I could fix this?

If possible, please keep in mind I only have a 4GB data cap, so I would love to set it up to use my 4GB data allotment. I've looked at tutorials like this one, and tried to put it together but it keeps failing, and it would still be appreciated. Thanks in advance for the help. A:

The old router has an IP address of 192.168.1.1, 3da54e8ca3
