Lenovo Ideapad Keeping your Lenovo Ideapad laptop in battery saver mode could always be more efficient were it not for that pesky backlight keyboard, right? Well, you won't have to worry about it anymore, according to the developer of Auto Keyboard Backlight, because your laptop will be forced to dim the keyboard light depending on the battery settings you have on. Make sure you find the best option for you, and choose between Persistent and Timeout mode. These modes basically deal with the same issue, only in a somewhat different way. Persistent mode will adjust your laptop's backlight keyboard depending on your battery settings. This means that if you have battery saving mode on, your keyboard will be as dim as possible. If you crank up the energy setting, the keyboard will be bright and shiny. It's totally up to you, but this time, the keyboard light won't stand in your way. The other option, Timeout mode, adjusts the keyboard light based on your use of the computer and keyboard, respectively. If you take a 30-minute break at some point, after just a couple of moments the app will dim the keyboard light, seeing as there is no use for it anyways. This is what the developer promises, and we hope it will definitely help you gain some extra energy for completing your work without actually needing a power socket. - Adjust keyboard light based on your usage patterns. - Set the keyboard light to be either persistent or time out based on your laptop's battery settings. - Change the keyboard light behavior to only work while you're typing or using the keyboard. - Configure the backlight to stay on for a number of seconds after your last keyboard activity. - Never let the keyboard light go on after you leave the computer. - Adjust keyboard backlight brightness from 100% to 0%. - Configure the keyboard backlight to stay on when your laptop goes into sleep or hibernation. - Compatible with most Lenovo
