Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a liquid crystal display apparatus, and particularly to a liquid crystal display apparatus including an active matrix liquid crystal display element. 2. Description of the Related Art The liquid crystal display apparatus (hereinafter abbreviated as “LCD”) is widely used for viewing images including characters, photographs, and motion pictures. The LCD is a thin and lightweight display apparatus, and is thus used for various portable apparatuses, such as mobile phones, PDAs (Personal Digital Assistants), portable information terminals, game players, and in-vehicle terminals. Furthermore, the LCD is expected to be used for a display apparatus for a large screen television in the future. The demand for a high-quality display for viewing high-resolution and high-dynamic-range images has been increasing. Specifically, a demand for a three-dimensional stereoscopic image has been increasing since an increase in the speed of video graphics of a computer is remarkable, and a demand for a high-quality large-screen stereoscopic display for viewing a stereoscopic image has also been increasing. Under the circumstances, it is considered that the video graphics on a CRT display apparatus will be replaced with the video graphics on a liquid crystal display apparatus in the future. However, it is very difficult to display a stereoscopic image using only the LCD. Therefore, an active matrix type liquid crystal display element and a technique for achieving high-quality, high-quality images are required. The following are considered as two possible methods for providing such high-quality, high-dynamic-range images. The first method is to increase the storage capacitance of a liquid crystal display element. An increase in the storage capacitance of the liquid crystal display element makes it possible to store a charge corresponding to a variation in the light transmittance of the liquid crystal display element, thereby achieving a high-quality image. However, this method requires a high driving voltage and thus makes it difficult 595f342e71
