Beginning with Windows Installer 5.0, a package can be authored to install a printer driver. The package can specify installation parameters for the printer driver. For information, see Adding Printer Drivers. In Windows Installer 5.0, the Windows Installer 5.0 service can enumerate all printers installed on the computer. If you want to enumerate all the installed printers, use the AdminConsoleInstanceFilter and a filter string of PRINTERS. In Windows Installer 5.0, you can have individual components be clean or silent. For example, a component can ask for user input, and you can have it ignore the error or continue with the installation. For more information, see Specifying Clean-Mode Behavior. Clean-mode behavior is optional for components that do not install files or registry entries. The Windows Installer 5.0 service can enumerate all components that are installed on the computer and display the list of components that are clean or silent. For example, an explicit warning message is displayed if you use either the silent or clean-mode behavior on the Primary Package. In Windows Installer 5.0, the Windows Installer 5.0 service can enumerate all components that are installed on the computer and display the list of components that are clean or silent. Software distribution is an automated process that installs applications on a computer. Some software manufacturers distribute software as an installation package. This package contains all the files and elements needed for the customer to install the software on the computer. The setup package is often referred to as the installer, as opposed to the installer alone. The setup package contains all of the files necessary for an installation, as well as any required registration information. After the customer installs the software, the setup package automatically registers the program for the user. The setup package also contains the software's license terms and the setup password. To learn more about installing a program, see Microsoft Knowledge Base articles and product documentation about installing a program.
