and this also requires, i think there is no need to mention. if we want to access the file with our zip files. we must ensure that it is not being accessed by another process. because, if so, we can't access the file. now, imagine, we have a zip file. and in this zip file, there are some files or any other folder(s). if we extract each of these, then the zip file will be the same size as it was earlier. but we have to copy all the files manually to our desired location. and if we need to do it for some folder, then we have to copy the files manually. and this is time consuming. now, imagine, we have a zip file. and in this zip file, we have some files or any other folder(s). if we extract each of these, then the zip file will be the same size as it was earlier. but we have to copy all the files manually to our desired location. and if we need to do it for some folder, then we have to copy the files manually. and this is time consuming. i have read all the previous answers, and i have also downloaded the zip4j but it is not compiling properly. i am trying to unzip a zip file and it is working fine with winzip but not with pkzip or java unzip. the accepted solution below works for me. i have to clarify something. when you say that "the class file (or zipfile) is not supported on windows", are you referring only to cygwin on windows, or are you saying that this class is not supported at all on windows? it seems to be the case that in the current release of the unzip package, this class is not included in the jar file. is that what you mean?
