Automatically detect and track all active applications on your computer. View usage statistics for each application. Create, edit, and manage custom categories for your applications. Generate a report of your application usage at any time. Export usage statistics to CSV files. Informative TUAW Rating: 4.6 Stars Phone Mania, an app that checks out websites for any changes made by the website, will find errors in your website content. If a new website page, image, or other piece of content has been added, then it will check it out and notify you if there's a change, updated information, or just a typo, with red error icons. The app is a free version with advertisements (or a $1.99 without), and also supports checking out a list of your own favorite sites for changes and updates. Phone Mania Description: Check out your sites quickly and easily. Phone Mania comes with a huge database of over 1.3 million websites and over 5 billion pages. Find errors and updates for your favorite sites. Phone Mania keeps your favorites on the top of the list. This is a great alternative to an app like GoFind, which is outdated and has a smaller database. Informative TUAW Rating: 4.0 Stars Adobe Reader is a freeware program that allows you to view and print documents in PDF format. PDF stands for "Portable Document Format," and is an open format that supports the creation of high-quality documents that can be read on both PCs and on mobile devices. PDF documents can be viewed on Macs, Windows PCs, Windows tablets, Windows Phones, Android phones, and Android tablets, and even on Apple iOS devices, with an online Adobe Acrobat account. The version of Adobe Reader available for Windows Phone 7.5 is ad-supported (and incompatible with Windows Phone 8), but you can download it for free from the Windows Phone Store. What's New in the Track Your Time?

Track Your Time is a handy cross-platform application that can help you out, as it keeps an eye on how long each program has been used. It may not be the most novice-friendly utility out there, but it is not too difficult to configure, and it provides you with valuable statistics. Organize your applications into relevant categories Track Your Time detects every program that has been brought to the foreground automatically, and you can then find it in the Uncategorized list within the Applications window. From here, you can move it to any category you deem suitable. When a new category is created, it is assigned a random color automatically. You can, of course, change this color, as well as rename the category at any time. It is also worth noting that multiple profiles can be created. Different applications can be placed in the available categories for each profile, should you wish to, for instance, track work and leisure time separately. Analyze your statistics and learn how you can increase your productivity Once everything has been configured, you can just let the program run in the background while you get on with your other tasks. Track Your Time is very unobtrusive, but it can be accessed at any time from the system tray. It is possible to generate an application usage report for specific time periods, and then export the information to a CSV file. A simple graphic representation of the data is also displayed. Easy enough to use for the most part, but it lacks documentation This is a relatively intuitive program, but some of the more advanced settings may be a bit confusing for first-time users. Unfortunately, no English documentation is available to help novices. All in all, Track Your Time is a great tool for those who wish to manage their work time more effectively, as it provides you with detailed application usage statistics. Some documentation would certainly be helpful, but new users shouldn't have too much trouble getting the hang of things. Price: Free, 2.2 MB download, 10.10 or later The trial version will be activated automatically, and it will be counted towards your free time statistics.
