I'm writing a script for my site, and its probably one of the weirdest ones you've probably read. Basically, I'm using a free API by a company where I should be able to get one of their objects, then fill a form and finally send an email with the data. BUT, for some reason, when I do this: $result = mysql query("SELECT * FROM ck api treatments' WHERE 'is succeeded' = 0 AND 'last updated' = 0;"); I get an "Resource id #3" error. When I log the SQL query, it returns the correct SQL, and it's a list of every field in the table. The table exists and has entries, so I'm pretty sure its not a missing table or anything. Why do I get this error? Is there some debugging stuff that could help me understand what's going on? A: Use mysql error(). It will return the last error of a query. A: I've had a similar problem before, and it turned out to be that I was sending a request before mysgl connect() function was called and thus didn't have a DB connection. You could try connecting first, if you're sure the connection parameters are correct., after all, will
