To evaluate the impact of emergency hospitalization delay on mortality of older patients (i.e., patients older than 65) hospitalized for acute heart failure (AHF). A secondary analysis of a multicenter prospective cohort study of 558 patients treated in an emergency department for AHF was conducted. The main outcome measure was 30-day and 1-year mortality rates. At the multivariate analysis, the factors significantly associated with mortality were chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, confusion, preadmission treatment with antibiotics, dyspnea, hemodynamic compromise, and decompensated heart failure. These factors represented the independent clinical predictors of 30-day and 1-year mortality. When admitted within 6 h of symptoms onset, the 30-day mortality was 9.5% and the 1-year mortality was 21.0%. However, when the admission delay was longer than 6 h, the 30-day mortality and 1-year mortality were 44.1% and 57.2%, respectively.
