Sustained expression of antisense mRNA targeting protein tyrosine kinase Janus kinase 2 (JAK2) abrogates JAK2 protein expression and modulates JAK2-dependent responses in leukemic cells. Janus kinases (JAKs) participate in cellular signaling initiated by many cytokine and growth factor receptors and are found to be overexpressed in various hematopoietic malignancies. JAK2 is uniquely activated by the BCR/ABL fusion protein present in chronic myeloid leukemia. In this study, we have shown that antisense oligonucleotide (ASO) targeting JAK2 mRNA was able to reduce JAK2 expression and protein tyrosine kinase activity in a JAK2-positive cell line, FDC-P1, in which JAK2 is necessary for factor-independent cell growth. Introduction of the ASO resulted in a sustained down-regulation of JAK2 expression for up to 36 h, and a significant down-regulation of JAK2 protein was observed as early as 12 h. The introduction of ASO also resulted in reduced JAK2-dependent signals measured by the activation of signal transducer and activator of transcription (STAT) factor 5a and a JAK2-dependent increase in the number of viable cells. These data suggest that JAK2 is a potent target for therapeutic intervention in JAK2-overexpressing hematopoietic malignancies.
