The share of insurance sold through the federally operated marketplaces, known as the exchanges, is expected to rise to at least 20 percent this year, meaning that about 1 million individuals — or up to 1 in 4 enrollees — will choose plans that are sold exclusively through the exchanges, according to an independent report released Monday by the Urban Institute. That would increase private enrollment in the exchanges by 20 percent over 2016 figures, increasing the number of people buying insurance on the exchanges by 1.5 million, and increase federal expenditures on the health insurance market. The Urban Institute's report does not account for the national increase in exchange enrollment, so it doesn't factor in any additional federal spending. But that the federal exchanges will benefit the vast majority of the public, not just the 1 million or so individuals who are relatively affluent, has benefits for the federal budget and insurance consumers. Because the federal government pays insurance companies to provide plans sold through the exchanges, the Urban Institute report says that the federal government will generate between $1 billion and $1.5 billion in "savings" over the course of a single year, although many of these savings will be offset by the higher administrative costs associated with the more expensive but healthier enrollees, according moving forward with his activism via his legal team after the NFL refused to allow the former NFL player to play this season. In a statement released Friday, Kaepernick's legal team said that the quarterback filed a notice of appeal to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit. "We have been made aware of the NFL's denial on the requested permission to play this season and while we are disappointed with the denial, we will proceed with our legal remedies," the statement released by Reid Weinroth of the National Football Players Association reads. Kaepernick has said he doesn't want to continue playing football because of the treatment of African-Americans in this country. "I am not ready to stand for the National Anthem. To me, this is bigger than football and it would be selfish on my part to look the other way. There are bodies in the street and people getting paid leave and getting away with murder." That is why he took a knee during the national anthem before NFL games, even when he was playing. Kaepernick's legal team wants the U.S. Court of Appeals to rule on the matter and to allow Kaepernick to play this season. New York Jets players locked arms during the National Anthem ahead of Monday night's game against the Buffalo Bills. The NFL later announced that all players would be expected to stand for the National Anthem.
