In the 2014 midterm elections, Democrats in 53 congressional districts, including all five Republican-held seats, had to defend incumbency. On Tuesday, Republicans in all five of those districts were on the defensive as they sought to avoid a third consecutive loss — and what would be a historic defeat for the class. Five things to watch as the maps move from deep-red to purple on Tuesday: Democrat Jon Ossoff is poised to take the seat in Georgia's 6th District, and the GOP's challenge to the narrative Incumbent Republican Karen Handel is in a tight race in the suburbs of Atlanta in the 6th District, where she is running against Ossoff, a 28-year-old documentary filmmaker who has been endorsed by virtually every big-name Democratic player in politics. Ossoff is the first Democrat in a congressional district won by Mitt Romney in
