the base is virtually identical to the asus g750jx-dc74x-34gm; theyre both black plastic shells with a matching steel plate on the bottom, but the g750jx-dc74x-34gm has a glossy black finish on the bottom. both have comfortable, cushioned, desktop-like keyboard tops. the asus g750jx-dc74x-34gm is $329 at newegg. the g750jx-dc74x-34gm has a slightly smaller hard drive, a single core processor, and a single speaker. both are for budget and value-conscious gamers who want to add an extra monitor to a pc. the system boots up and loads the recovery disk. recovery tools will be automatically loaded. if you have encountered a problem during the process, the recovery tools will offer suggestions for solutions. the tools are pretty good, offering recovery for windows xp, vista, windows 7 and windows 8. you can also get more information about the problem on the screen. the tools will prompt you to insert the disk into the dvd drive if needed. from there, you can choose to perform a system restore or start windows normally, or any other option. users of asus computers with windows vista installed can either use the recovery partition or the recovery dvd. if you no longer have the recovery partition intact or the dvd, go to download alternative recovery disk for asus. to enable the recovery process, press f8 to get to the advanced boot options screen. from there, hit the f12 key to enter the bios setup. navigate to the boot device section, and then choose your dvd drive as the first boot option. the g750jx starts at $1199, which isn't bad for the latest generation of high-end gaming laptop. battery life gets a decent 4.5 hours, and the integrated graphics will allow for light video playback on the move, although it's best suited for more basic tasks. you get the usual assortment of ports (including an hdmi output) as well as some extras like a fingerprint reader, a pair of usb 3.0 ports and 2 usb 2.0 ports. the g750jx also incorporates asus's unique gamefirst 5 software, which can be disabled or set to a lower priority if you don't need it.
