Screenshots:The deinococcus quadrifidus group (Rickettsiales): a new candidate for a cause of febrile systemic disease. It has become evident that the majority of the alphaproteobacteria inhabit in environments other than those with living animals. Thus, an increased understanding of these organisms is necessary for our knowledge of the organisms living in extreme conditions, and, consequently, the development of new antibiotic- and vaccine-development tools. One example of this is the genus Rickettsia, which is the causative agent of many diseases in animals and humans. Although this genus is classified into 7 formally described species, more species are likely to be discovered, as the diversity of organisms previously described was based on genetic comparisons of only a limited number of genes. Thus, there remains a need for a method to screen many more genes of this taxon to uncover novel diversity, to identify new species, and to determine the genetic and genomic diversity of this taxon. In this study, we analyzed the genome of a clinical isolate of the deinococcus quadrifidus group (DQG) (formerly known as "Kp-deinococcus"), which shares its habitat with K. pneumoniae. The sequence of the genome (an overall GC content of 31.7 2edc1e01e8

Cherbak said he expects more time to pass before any changes are made in the capital punishment system The Alberta Court of Appeal has struck down a section of the Criminal Code which allows the death penalty to be imposed for first-degree murder. Alberta Justice Minister Jonathan Denis will announce the decision at a news conference in Edmonton Tuesday. "It is with great reluctance that I have to take the position that in my view the appeal lacks merit and the court has reached the correct conclusion," Denis said in a statement. "But the appeal court has also come to a determination on the law which is completely inconsistent with the position that I took in the courts. "Alberta has a sentencing regime and a process for the imposition of sentences that stands up to scrutiny."
