History The first version of the Diana software was originally designed to help the Egyptian army communicate and coordinate, by taking advantage of its multiple keyboard layouts. The original version of the software was a mess of keyboard layouts and ugly looking buttons and titles. After the original software was reviewed by Egypt, Diana was updated to fix all the bugs and make the user experience more user friendly. In 2011, the Diana desktop software was replaced by an Android app and then by an iOS app in 2013. Features Diana was initially intended to cater to the needs of government officials and professional software engineers. The software includes multiple keyboard layouts including Arabic, Egyptian, French, English, Persian, Spanish, Urdu, Hebrew and Italian. Diana can automatically switch between layouts as needed. Keyboard layout switch A keyboard layout switch is available. If a keyboard layout is changed in the middle of a file, the program will reload the file. Multiple task list organization The project plan screen allows the user to organize multiple tasks into multiple project teams. The individual task lists can be sorted by due dates, priority, and status. A folder icon next to each task list allows the user to add new tasks to the project. Reminders When a new task is entered, a reminder will pop-up after a specified number of hours or days, which can be customized. Scheduling Diana can be scheduled to run once a day, week, or month. When the program is scheduled, it will run at a specific time and the time can be changed via the preferences. Integration with Google and Apple calendars Diana can synchronize with both Google and Apple's calendar systems. This allows the user to enter new tasks into their calendar as well. Tools A calendar view is available where the user can see all of their task lists at once. This allows the user to enter new tasks into their daily to-do list or into a specific project. A log book view can be accessed by going to the history menu and then selecting the log book tab. This allows the user to enter their most important tasks into the log book and review them at a later date. User interface The user interface consists of two main parts, the project list and the project plan. The project list is accessed by clicking the project icon in the top right hand corner of the desktop version. The project list is divided into two sections, a task list for daily tasks and
