CD58, a cell surface protein, is expressed by a variety of cells including endothelial cells, resting natural killer (NK) cells and cytotoxic T lymphocytes (CTL). Studies in murine models have shown that CD58 functions in the development of thymocyte-NK cell and thymocyte-CTL interactions. In this study we examined the role of CD58 in the development and function of human CTL. CD58 was expressed by CTL that were purified and grown in interleukin-2 (IL-2) and interferon-gamma (IFN-gamma) from peripheral blood (PB) of normal donors, and also by CTL derived from patients with acute T cell lymphocytic leukemia (T-ALL). To determine the role of CD58 in the induction of CTL activity, CD58 was knocked down in the human CTL clone RA18-19 by transduction with human CD58 RNAi cDNA. In order to test whether the knockdown of CD58 in the CTL clone affects CTL function, we measured CTL cytotoxic activity against K562 target cells. The results showed that, compared with control CTL, the CD58-knockdown CTL exhibited an impaired ability to kill target cells. This cytotoxic defect was reversed by the overexpression of CD58. To determine the role of CD58 in CTL activation, we measured the ability of CD58-knockdown CTL to produce IL-2 and IFN-gamma. The results showed that the CD58-knockdown CTL produced less IL-2 and IFN-
