The effect of 2,4-D and 2,4,5-T on the hemopoietic response of non-rodents. The effects of 2,4-D and 2,4,5-T on the hemopoietic response of non-rodent animals have been studied. Daily injections of 2,4-D increased the WBC count of beagle dogs, at concentration of 5 mg/kg body weight, for the first three weeks and showed an increase in the bone-marrow erythrocyte count. 2,4-D did not show the same effect on the other animals tested and showed no effect on the hemopoietic response in all other non-rodent animals tested. 2,4,5-T showed a dose-dependent increase in the WBC count, but showed no such effect on the other hemopoietic values tested.

This invention relates to an installation for manufacturing bituminous surfacing structures. More particularly, it relates to an installation for manufacturing hollow-cored asphalt-emulsion-based bituminous surface structures. During the last few years, hollow-cored asphalt surfacing structures have been developed in which the asphalt-emulsion mixture is injected under pressure into the hollow cores of the structure, which are formed from a porous body or casing, typically made of an open-cell structure of diatomaceous earth. The cores are subsequently pressurized to an elevated temperature and allowed to harden. This results in a structure having a solidified asphalt shell, which encases the cores and is produced in the manufacture of the structure. A completed hollow-cored asphalt-based surfacing structure is described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,640,524, issued on Feb. 3, 1987. This type of surfacing structure has many advantages. In general, it can be manufactured at a significantly lower cost than conventional aggregate-based asphalt-surfaced structures. Moreover, it can
